

Oriental Rugs For Generations

For over 2,500 years, Oriental rugs have been used in the East by Nomads and villagers for warmth and beauty. More recently in the West, they have graced homes with their art and luxury, and go with any decor. An oriental rug is a purchase for a lifetime and when properly maintained, for generations.

There are three types to consider when you want to purchase an Oriental Rug; handmade in a flat weave or knotted pile, hand tufted, and machine made. Other factors that influence what you select will be the fibers the rug is made from – commonly wool, cotton, silk or synthetic- the complexity of the design, number of colors used, dying technique (vegetable or synthetic), knot count, and age and condition of antique and semi-antique rugs.

What room are you looking to use it in? The amount of traffic and exposure to soiling should be considered. Are you looking for a piece of art for your floor that will last for a lifetime or a decorating accessory for the short term?

Handmade weavings from natural fibers make an inviting soft appeal. Pattern clarity is achieved by using tight smooth finishes. Tribal artifacts, pillows and tapestries can be components of well-decorated room.

Since area rugs are movable from room to room and house to house, they are an investment. The quality of the materials and the construction will insure longevity of both the look and value of a fine rug. Handmade Oriental rugs will last for generations with proper care and maintenance. Industry Partner, Home Decor Fine Rugs, combines an extensive selection, 3 generations of experience and the utmost dedication and service in order to provide you with a fabulous sales and service experience, regardless of budget. The Ghods family has been in business for well over 50 years and owned three galleries in their home country of Persia. Their experience and craftsmanship comes from as far back as three generations of master rug weavers and look forward to working with you on your next project.
